

When Street Art invests the Table Arts

The Mauviel brand of kitchen utensils has given carte blanche to a dozen artists in order to create unique and original objects, all sold for a good cause. For the second edition of the M'Cook Art project, Mauviel, a high-end cooking utensils company created in 1830, offered a dozen artists the opportunity to work, transform, dress, cut, weld or paint the utensil of their choice. Their only limits being their imagination and the theme « The 7 deadly sins – the gluttony »

The painter Yann Sciberras also participated in this project. He approaches art as a snapshot of real life, current events, our way of life, our anxieties and fantasies. He thus printed his art on a plate using graffiti representing slogans, words, images responding to his perception of what surrounds him. These everyday objects transformed into works of art will be auctioned at a sale to be held at the Pavillon Ledoyen in Paris on September 11. The profits from the sale will be entirely donated to the « Toutes à l'école » association, which works in Cambodia to develop the schooling of underprivileged girls and adolescents.

JournalDesFemmes.com

